A Banner Year for LUCAS

LUCAS

If you measure success by counting the increase in teaching and research opportunities, you would have to conclude that 1996-97 was a very good year for Lakehead University Centre for Analytical Services (LUCAS).

The financial statements look pretty good too.

At their Annual Meeting on October 6, 1997, Director

Allan MacKenzie announced that LUCAS's activity has increased across the board.

This is especially true for the Aquatic Toxicology Research Centre (ATRC) and the Environmental Laboratory where tighter government regulations are increasing the demand for environmental testing.

MacKenzie reported that in 1996-97, LUCAS's gross revenues topped $400,000 which is an increase of 85% over the previous year.

When you consider that all of this revenue goes toward upgrading research equipment, hiring technicians, and creating new opportunities for faculty and students, you get a better appreciation of LUCAS's entrepreneurial spirit. To receive your copy of the Annual Report contact Allan MacKenzie at 343-8853.

As you are aware, Dr. Bob Rosehart's resignation has required that the Board of Governors establish a Presidential Search Committee. This Committee has been formed and has begun meeting regularly.

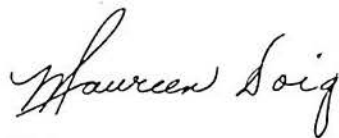

During the early phase of the Search, it is important that the Committee gain a clear understanding of what the University and regional community perceive as necessary qualifications, experience, and personal qualities in the next President. The Search Committee is interested in hearing the views and opinions of all members of the University community and of the greater regional community. If you would like to share your ideas with the Committee, please write to me in care of the Board Secretariat, UC-2009, Lakehead University, Thunder Bay, P7B 5E1

The Search Committee plans to spend the next several months, or as long as it takes, to find the best possible President for Lakehead University. We hope that you will assist in this endeavour by keeping in touch with us throughout the Search and offering your views and suggestions.

Thank you.

An Update from the Interim President

Dr. John Whitfield

Quo Vadis?

A planning process is underway to set Lakehead's course into the next millennium. Led by Dr. Jim Gellert and the Senate Academic Committee, the result will be a broadly-based strategic plan for the University. It's timely and necessary as we move beyond the forced downsizing and budget reductions, continue with student recruitment and enrolment management, and make strategic decisions covering programming, both academic and support.

It is anticipated that the plan development will take about 18 months. There will be opportunities for community-wide input from both within the University and externally.

Tuition Fees

"Canada needs to continue shifting university costs onto those who are the system's chief beneficiaries: the students" argues a Globe and Mail editorial (Let tuition rise, October 1, 1997). This is wrong, in my view, for at least two reasons:

[1] post-secondary education is vital to the economic and social well-being of our province. There must be a fair share of the cost borne by the public;

[2] at Lakehead, students currently pay nearly 50% of the cost of their education. Is it fair, reasonable or desirable for them to pay more in a provincially assisted university?

Toronto Iron

"Toronto Iron" is out of this world and Dr. Steve Kissin, Chair of Geology, is excited. Kissin, an expert in identifying meteorites, just confirmed "Toronto Iron" as one. The wife of the man who picked it up, nobody knows where, gave it to a friend who gave it to the University of Toronto for identification. It was forwarded to Kissin to determine its origin. The "Toronto Iron" is just one of several meteorites "authenticated" by Kissin.

Capital Project

The C. J. Sanders Building will receive an $889,000 face-lift through the Canada/Ontario Infrastructure Works Program. The renovations to the Kinesiology facility are jointly supported by the federal and provincial governments and the University. Renovations which will begin in May when classes are finished will create teaching and research space as well as provide barrier-free access.

CIDA Award

Lakehead University is one of six universities in Canada to be successful in the latest CIDA Tier 1 competition. Lakehead, together with its partners, has been awarded $2.53 million to undertake a five-year international forestry project in Ghana. The goal is to enhance the capacity of institutions, organizations and communities in northern Ghana to contribute to a resolution of environmental problems and to the improvement of the social and economic conditions. This will serve as a model for similar work in rural areas throughout Ghana and West Africa.

Congratulations to Dr. John Naysmith, the project Director, and Mrs. Anne Klymenko, Research Officer, who have been working on the application for nearly two years.

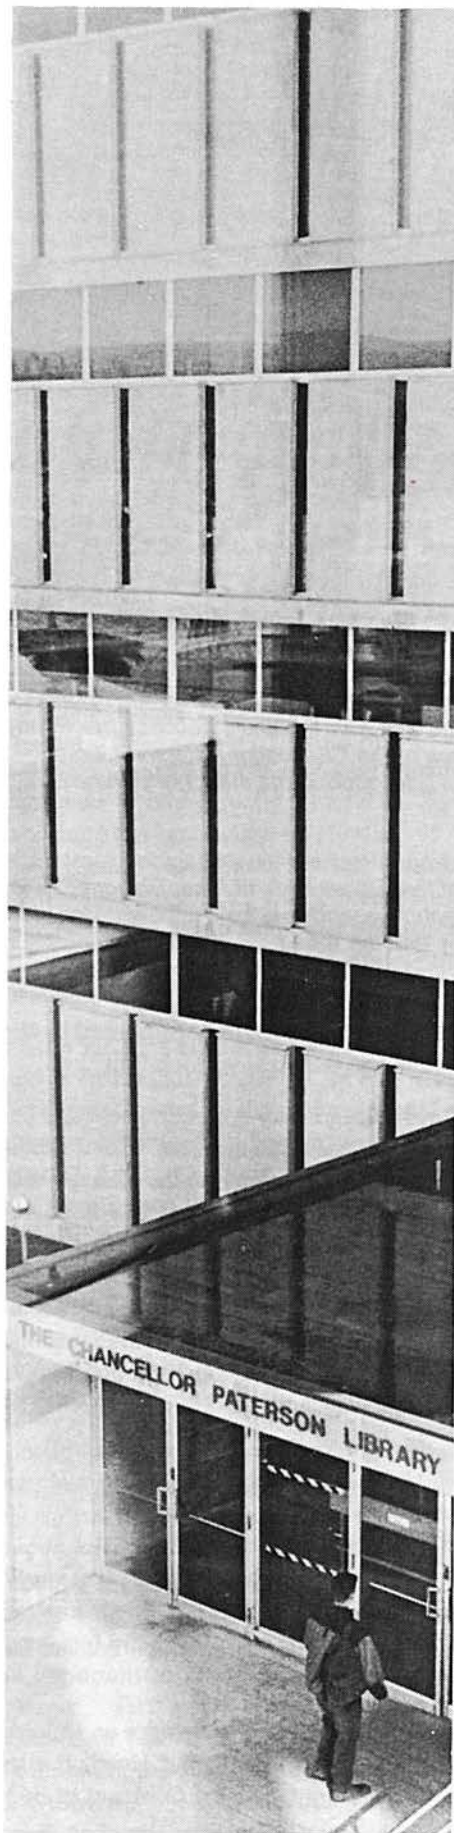

Versa Strike

As you are aware by the pickets at the main entrances to the University, the strike between SEIU and Versa Campus Services continues. We are urging the two parties to resolve their differences. However, until this occurs, we request that all faculty, staff and students use caution when entering or exiting the University premises. In this way, any unfortunate situations can be avoided.

Dr. Burnley Stevens

A former member of the Board of Governors of Lakehead University, Dr. Burnley W. Stevens, died on September 12, 1997. The University extends its condolences to Mrs. Stevens and their family.

Barriers and Challenges to becoming Physically Active

by Tony Bauer
Associate Professor of Kinesiology

The economic health benefits of an active lifestyle are becoming more apparent and acceptable to the Canadian population.

Adjustment to an active lifestyle however, proves to be a challenging process. The transition from a sedentary lifestyle to low or even moderate levels of physical activity often requires considerable readjustment. Trends in physical activity levels for Canadians demonstrate positive increases over the last 10 to 15 years. Nine out of ten Canadians however do not follow the desirable minimum levels of activity (30 minutes of activity every other day). Major barriers include lack of time, energy and motivation and depend on individual circumstances such as employment and family obligations. Additional minor and moderate barriers tend to be more social and environmental. The challenge during the next decade will be to move Canadians from sedentary levels to at least a moderate level of activity.

Currently the most popular physical activities include walking, gardening and home exercise at all age levels. The most attractive leisure time activities for adults and children include watching television, reading, music, hobbies and visiting friends. Our challenge is to convince parents and their children to incorporate more physical activity into their day to day leisure time activities. Simple strategies might combine television, music and socializing with some form of moderate or more demanding exercise. Music and the social medium provides the stimulation and motivation for a more pleasurable and rewarding activity experience. Partnership with video media and computer games are potential approaches toward influencing children and youth through popular leisure pursuits. The increased popularity and convenience of home exercise has promoted a boom industry and provides the advantages of family oriented activity. Parents are able to provide role model behaviour for the children who can join in the activity at home.

To gain the health benefits, more consideration has to be directed toward low activity population groups including low income groups, people with young children, middle aged men and women and women over 65 years of age. These groups experience greater challenges and barriers to an active lifestyle and require support programs to assist the process.

In order to maintain the increased levels of physical activity and gain the economic health benefits the research and educational process is and will be the driving force for the future. In Ontario, alarming threats to high school physical education curriculums highlight the need to demonstrate the health and economic benefits of raising the activity levels of young Canadians.

WUSC International Seminar in Vietnam and Botswana

by Dr. Yves Prévost

For six weeks in May and June 1998, you could be advising a group of 10 highly motivated Canadian students on international development projects in Vietnam or Botswana.

This year a new format for the World University of Canada international seminar will provide opportunities to work in two countries. Vietnam will be the host of one Faculty Advisor and 10 students while Botswana will host two Faculty Advisors and 20 students.

In 1996 I had the pleasure of participating in the seminar held in Peru, where we worked in Puno on the shores of Lake Titicaca. Projects that the students undertook covered, water quality of Lake Titicaca, cost of water, legal reform, traditional medicine versus western medicine, child labour, tourism and reproductive decisions for rural women.

The students lived with local families, were paired off with Peruvian student counterparts in their research areas, were affiliated with the University, and conducted library research, interviews, and lead discussions to meet their study objectives. As an advisor, I assisted the group in planning their research and helped them discover new approaches to getting the information they desired.

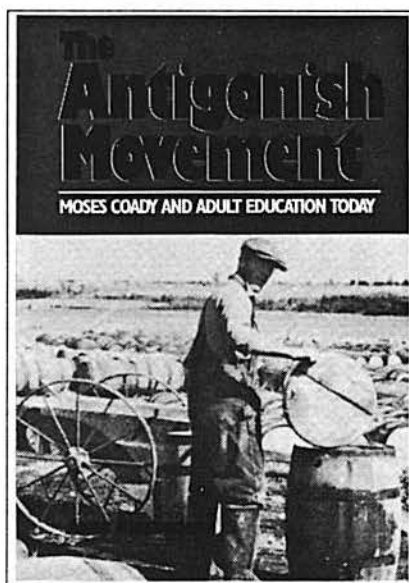

Anyone interested in serving as one of the three Faculty Advisors or one of the 30 students selected from across Canada should contact Yves Prévost by telephone at 343-8342 or by E-mail:

yves.prevost@lakeheadu.ca

Applications should be submitted to Prévost by October 24 1997

The Antigonish Movement

Moses Coady and Adult Education Today

"The Antigonish Movement flourished over 50 years ago but it continues to fascinate and challenge Canadians today. In 1930s, as now, many people believed that the problems and injustices of life resulted from forces beyond their control. Moses Coady could not have disagreed more. With missionary zeal he implored people to change themselves and their society. Liberation, he insisted, could be achieved through adult education. Do we today have the confidence to make such a claim? The Antigonish Movement is a symbol of an activist heritage in adult education. In this book, Anne Alexander examines background to this important movement, its activities and the individuals involved, in order to show its continuing relevance to practitioners of adult education today."

Dr. Anne Alexander is celebrating the publication of her first book entitled The Antigonish Movement: Moses Coady and Adult Education Today. (Toronto: Thompson Educational Publishing, 1997)

Reviewers recommend the book as a text for courses in education, history, sociology, Canadian studies, social issues, community development and co-operatives. It is also recognized by the reviewers as a book to be "read with enjoyment by the lay person." St. Francis Xavier University, in Antigonish, honoured Alexander this summer by inviting her to lead a workshop with the faculty and to be the guest speaker at a public forum. At the forum, with about 100 people in attendance, Alexander addressed the topic "Lessons from the Past for the New Millennium."

Alexander came to Lakehead University to work as an assistant professor in the Faculty of Arts and Science during 1993-94 after having taught in universities in Alberta, Ontario and Saskatchewan. She also worked in those provinces in governmental and non-governmental organizations and on projects in St. Kitts, Guyana, Trinidad, Kenya and the NWT. Alexander holds a PhD from the University of Alberta, a master's degree from the University of Toronto, and undergraduate degrees from Queen's University.

Recently Alexander has been working with the Northern Health Human Resources Research Unit (NHHRRU) and her colleague Dr. Tony Thompson on a study dealing with the recruitment and retention of health care professionals in rural and under serviced regions. Thompson is a former associate professor with Lakehead's Department of Psychology and is now at Charles Sturt University in Australia.

Dr. Frederick Holmes (English) has published the Historical Imagination: Postmodernism and the Treatment of the Past in Contemporary British Fiction, English Literary Studies Monograph Series 73, Victoria: English Literary Studies, 1997.

The book is a study of novels by eight British writers that focus attention on the fabricated character both of their own depictions of past events and, more broadly, of all attempts to represent experience in language. As a result, they sensitize readers to the status of history as a discourse constructed by people for particular political and psychological ends rather than as an objective record of the truth about the past.

The Historical Imagination analyzes the treatment in these novels of a variety of issues which emerge from this basic recognition.

Professor Mark Nisenholt (Visual Arts) designed the book's cover.

Let the Calls Begin

Starting this month Marilyn Rudecki, a third year Education student, will be helping to coordinate the work of 30 part-time student callers working on the Alumni Annual Fund phonathon. The goal this year is to raise $200,000 for Lakehead University. If you would like to help out as a volunteer, contact Rob Zuback at 343-8916.

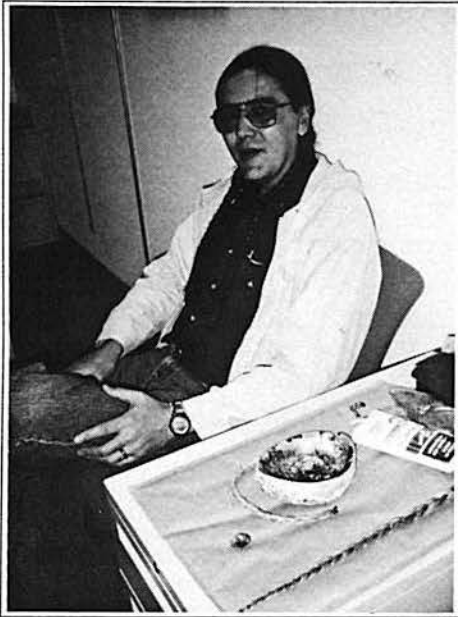

Representatives of psychology licensing boards throughout the U.S. and Canada chose a Lakehead University professor as their organization's new president-elect.

Dr. William T. Melnyk (Psychology), who served three years on the Association's Board of Directors as secretary-treasurer (1994-97), was elected by acclamation in a vote at the Association of State and Provincial Psychology Boards (ASPPB)'s Annual Meeting of Delegates on September 19, 1997.

Melnik has served 12 years on the Board of Examiners in Psychology of Ontario. He is a professor of psychology at Lakehead and maintains a private practice. He received his doctorate in clinical psychology from Queen's University.

Lakehead University, October, 1997

Profile

Michael K. McIsaac
Counsellor
Native Support Services

Mike McIsaac is well suited to his new job at Lakehead University. He has a strong background in clinical psychology and a desire to integrate traditional Native values into his day-to-day work as a therapist.

McIsaac came to Thunder Bay last July from the University of Manitoba where he had been working as a Cultural Support Therapist.

Originally from Mattawa, Ontario, he spent 16 years in business before completing an honours degree in Psychology at Nipissing University in North Bay.

To date he has worked at the North Bay Psychiatric Hospital, the Stony Mountain Penitentiary in Winnipeg, and as a Therapist and a Drug and Alcohol Worker on Native reserves in Ontario.

According to McIsaac, the most common difficulty Native students have on a university campus is feeling that they belong.

"I want Aboriginal students to feel comfortable being an Aboriginal person -- not just in any classroom or office on campus, but in any part of the city," he says. "I want them to feel comfortable being who they are and to take ownership of their experience."

McIsaac is very positive about Lakehead University and, although relatively new to the campus, he has a number of ideas about ways to strengthen this sense of community.

One is to have an Aboriginal student centre with an academic advisor, a cultural coordinator, and perhaps a full or part-time researcher. Another is to have a meaningful role for Aboriginal alumni in recruiting high school students from the Reserves. Alumni could also be helping to raise money for student scholarships.

McIsaac would like to see more Native students attending Lakehead University in the future and more Native students aspiring to become members of the faculty.

"It used to be that a Grade 10 education was all that was needed for senior positions in Aboriginal organizations. Now these organizations are looking for people with university and postgraduate degrees to work as accountants, lawyers, engineers, and social workers... Lakehead is in a prime position to be a national leader in providing education to Aboriginal people."

McIsaac hopes that Native Support Services will develop a greater presence on campus. He doesn't want the department to become marginalized and is encouraging everyone who is interested to drop by.

Some faculty have already invited him to take part in their programming and McIsaac is encouraged by this trend. "I would hope that staff and faculty here would use me as a resource," he says.

Currently McIsaac is working on a Master's degree in Psychology with the University of Manitoba.

Eventually he hopes to be accepted into Lakehead University's PhD program in Clinical Psychology and to one day join the faculty.
