A large, multi-story stone building, likely a university hall, featuring a central tower with a clock face and arched windows. The building is surrounded by green lawns and trees, with a paved path leading towards the entrance.

- A unique educational focus on Aboriginal peoples and the legal needs of Aboriginal communities.
- Address declining participation in sole and small law firm practice.
- Address the legal issues related to the resource-based Northern Ontario economy.

Lakehead's new Faculty of Law has a unique mission to improve access to justice in Aboriginal, northern, and rural communities, and to create a new legal education culture to foster improved and informed relationships in northern law practice.

Basic renovations including heating, ventilation, and electrical upgrades have been completed; however, additional renovations are required for classrooms and other learning spaces. A request has been submitted by Lakehead University to the federal government to fund these capital costs as well as to purchase resources for the Faculty of Law Library.
